“We may not be able to prepare the future for our children, but we can at least prepare our children for the future” by Franklin D Roosevelt

Being responsible parents is one of the foremost duties in every step of parenthood. Children learn more from observing and experiencing the world than by taught words. The right example must be provided to the children so that they can learn ethical behavior. Actions speak louder than words. Instead of saying “be polite,” it is by demonstration of actions that the children will understand precisely.

One of the most important characteristics of parenthood is spending quality time with their children. It is only by this, that children will develop a deeper bond of love and understanding between their parents.

Another such crucial quality parents must imbibe in the children is of emphasizing more on moral values and less on materialistic things. Responsible parents place more significance on values like honesty, kindness, compassion and integrity and less on materialistic aspects like grades, competition, expensive things and grooming. A sound character goes a longer way than a better grade.

In conclusion, remember that your child is unique and you know him/her better than anyone else on the planet. You will always get input, no matter how obvious or subtle, from the world around you as to how you should parent your child. You, however, are the expert on your child and get to make your own decisions about how to parent him/her in a way that teaches him/her to be independent and accountable in life.

Don't trash them. First, we should never throw e-waste in the trash! Even the small stuff like phones or batteries shouldn't go in the trash. There are some toxic (dangerous) chemicals in these products that don't belong in the trash. It's bad for our environment, plus it means throwing away valuable metals that can be recycled.

Pass them on for reuse. Sometimes you have something that still works, but you don't use it any more. But somebody else might use it. The best thing to do is to give it to someone else who can keep using it (only if your parents say it's ok.) If you don't find a family member or friend who wants it, you can often donate it to a charity in your community.

Recycle them. If you can't find someone who wants to use your old gadget, then you can recycle it. You probably already recycle newspapers or bottles or cans from your house. Electronics can be recycled, So, we all can use the GREEN HOUSE bin which is kept in the school premises and save the environment.
